According to the SGFP forensic psychologists avoid providing professional services to parties in a legal proceeding with whom they have personal or professional relationships that are inconsistent with the anticipated relationship, with an understanding that when it is necessary to provide both evaluation and treatment services to a party in a legal proceeding as may be the case in small forensic hospital settings or small communities the forensic psychologist takes reasonable steps to minimize, what are characterized as potential negative effects on the rights of the party, confidentiality, and the process of treatment and evaluation
